Speaking of Mr. Thurman's in-frmities General Kennedy said: "I have doubt that Mr. Thurman will attempt to take an active part in the campaign. He may make a few speeches in-doors at some of the principal meet-ings in the country, and he may be placed on exhibition by his party; but so far as his taking the part of an active speaker and attempting to influence votes by his oratory or his argument is concerned, it is preposterous to talk about it. Mr. Thurman is physically so weak that he can do little more than muster locomotion. He walks participates in nothing that would tax his physical constitution. Will be strengthen the tickets No, not a bit. He will, in my mind, not even bring out the full Democratic strength. Mr. Thurman has the reputation of being a very good man, and has many warm personal friends but he does not arouse enthusiasm, and his name will not be that snibboleth that his party expected it to be. Of course, there will be a ong and loud yell over the name of Thurman for awhile, but it will soon die away, and then he will be to his party what he really is to the country—a kind remembrance, a sort of tradition. It is foolish foolish to talk about Thurman carrying Ohio. We will have ten or twenty thousand majority with any man we may put

REPUBLICAN AMMUNITION.

Charges Affecting Thurman's Record During the Rebellion.

William E. Curtis, in Chicago News. The Republicans are getting ready to attack Judge Thurman's war record and are already searching the newspaper files for speeches made by him prior to and during the rebellion, to show his intimate relations with Vallandigham and his sympathy for secession. A gentleman of prominence here says that about a year after the escape of Gen. John Morgan, the rebel guerrilla, from the penitentiary at Columbus, he rode all day on the cars with the latter's brother, to whom he was favorably introduced by friends. During the journey Morgan became quite confidential, and, knowing his companion was from Columbus, gave a detailed account of the escape. The relation caused him so much astonishment that he, as soon as possible, committed it to writing, and still has the manuscript in his safe. He is not a politician, and never has been, but was a strong Unionist, and became so much prejudiced against Thur-man by the facts related by Morgan that he has never spoken to him since. While he has never shown the manuscript to any one, nor disclosed its details, he claims that Morgan's statement involves Thurman in the conspiracy, and he will soon, in all probability, give it to the press.

It will be remembered that General Morgan, his brothers, and Basil Duke, who were capt ured while on a raid through southern Ohio and confined in the State penitentiary as prisoners of war, escaped in almost mysterious manner and made their way to the confederate lines. There was an investigation of the affair, but it did not amount to anything, and the Union authorities were never satisfied. It was charged that the tunnel was a subterfuge and that the ortsoners made it in order to divert suspicion from the true manu-rof their escape, which was suspected to have been through the door of the prison by the bribery of the guards.

While the gentleman alluded to will not disclose the contents of the paper be holds, it is inferred from his conversation that young Morgan implicated Judge Thurman in the affair as the man who bribed the guards and furnished the e-caping prisoners with means to return to the confederate lines. This charge has never been openly made, but it probably will be before the present campaign is over, and the mysterious paper will doubtless be used to substantiate it I believe there is no question of Judge Thur-

man's attitude during the rebellion. Gen. John S. Robinson, now Secretary of State of Ohio, who was at Camp Chase, near Columbus, during the war, is authority for the charge that Judge Thurman's family regularly provided comforts and delicacies for the rebel prisoners confined there, but never did anything for the relief of the Union soldiers in the hospital. It will not be long before all of these ancient incidents will be brought out by the Republican campaign managers, and the "bloody shirt" shaken at the bandanna.

A German Paper Cautions Gresham Men to

Keep an Eye on Their Delegates. MILWAUKEE, June 11 .- The Herold (German daily) will publish to-morrow the following from its Washington correspondent: "The Gresham boom is giving certain wire-pullers no little trouble. They cannot understand how the Judge has grown to be so very popular that it is beginning to be dangerous for them to contheir melicious warfare against I have talked to-day with three prominent Congressmen who are certainly bitterly opposed to his nomination, and all of them expressed astonisment at my deckration that German Republicans scout the charge of Know-nothingtom against Gresham, and that every German Republican paper, so far as I thow, vigorously supports him. Of course, they had expected it to be otherwise. But I also know that every one of the three whom I talked to is anot opposed to Greatiam on account of his alleged Know-nothingism waen a youth, but because he is foe to corporations and mosopolies; in fact, all the opposition to him, if sifted, originated with monopolies and corporations, and is worked up by their tools and agents. It is well to call the attention of Judge Gresham's friends to the fact that many of the monopoly people here assert privately that a number of delegates who were elected as Gresham men in the Western States will not stick to him. The delegates should be looked after, whether this assertion is true or only a malicious invention."

WASHINGTON, June 11 .- "It is my opinion either Sherman or Harrison will head the Republican ticket," said Representative Dorsey, of Nebraska, to the Journal correspondent this afternoon. Mr. Dorsey is one of the most active Republicans in the House, and is considered one of Senator Sherman's managers. "Indiana, it is believed," continued Mr. Dorsey, "holds the key to the situation, and if she turns it she will win. Harrison can carry his State, and will be strong in New York. If we put on Morton, Hiscock or Phelps with Harrison we will carry Indiana, New York, New Jersey, Connectleut, and every Northern State, and will sweep the Pacific coast. Harrison, in my mind, stands in the very front rank for the nomination, and if Sherman is not chosen the Hoosier will be."

A. Moore, who pledged his support, both privately and on the stump, to General Harrison, if nomi nated, which he thought he would be. The effect of the meeting was to show that the Harrison sentiment among the Bepublicans of Decatur county was practically unanimous, and that all that was wanted was a chance to vote that sentiment in November. Atlanta onstitution. When we elect Mr. Cleveland I want his life insured for four years for I'm afraid of Thurman. Mrs. Arp has said all the time that the Northern Democrats were no better at heart than the Northern Republicans, and she sticks to it. It is not a man's politics that make him a gentieman. In fact, the Republicans of the North represent the wealth and refinement of their people. They constitute their best society. The Democratic party of the North has got 75 per cent. of all the ragtag and bob-tail element in it—all the scurf of immigration that lands at the Battery. It is a pity that Ben Hill could not have carried out his wishes as expressed in the Crittenden letter and made up a new party, composed of the bet-ter class of Northern Republicans and Southern Democrats. Such a party would have smothered the Anarchists at their birth and established our institutions and made our liberties more secure. I like these Northern Republicans who are coming down here to mingle with us. They are shrewd and practical, and they are gentlemen. I have met a dozen or so lately who are looking round for investments, and I like them. I dined with a couple yester-day, and sat right between them, and got as much dinner as I wanted.

No More Sentimental Politics. New York Mail and Express.

John I. Davenport, the active and leading Republican, was met at the Fifth avenue Hote to-day and was asked what he thought of the political outlook by a reporter. He replied: As to the outlook to-day, with good nominees, good judgment and a national committee the brains of whose managers are not in their heels, I believe we can carry every Northern State upon the issue which Mr. Cleveland has made. There are certain Southern States also-Tennessee and Alabama-in which is a strong protection element and one which is rapidly growing. While this may not appear prominently in the election returns this fall, my judgment is that four years from now these two States will show a very radical change of sentiment. Virginia and West Virginia are good missionary ground. In a talk which I had with a leading Democratic manufacturer of Alabama recently, this man said: "I'm through with sentimental way in manufactures since the war and in general prosperity. For one I am no longer a tree-trader, and this year I shall not vote for Cleveland." Will Indiana Repay the Compliment? St. Louis Dispatch to Cleveland Plain Dealer Dem. General Miley's treatment of an obtrusive Hoosier illustrates the general feeling. The Hoosier had irritated the beiligerent General by politics. Free trade was a Democratic sentiment before the war in Alabama. We have made great head-saving unkind things of Thurman and began to descant upon the necessity of nominating Gray in order to preserve Indiana and have a Democratic President. General Miley lost patience and blurted in his gruff way: "Now, you go way from me. I don't want to say anything ugly about Gray, but I want you to understand we don't care a d-n about Indiana. We are tired of hearing about Indiana being the head of the Union. Now, I know all about it and it comes - near the other end."

INDIANA.

Slain in an Attempt to Protect a Wife from the Violence of Her Husband.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal FRANKLIN, June 11 .- One of the most atrocions crimes ever committed in this county was the brutal murder of Aaron Hudson Lamar by Benjamin F. Law, at the home of the latter, between 8 and 9 o'clock last night. The murderer lives almost eight miles north of this city, and is a notorious character. The facts as gleaned by your correspondent are these: Lamar is from Illinois. Last November he was employed by Law to do farm labor. Some time ago Law came home drunk, and, accusing Lamar of being too intimate with his wife, ordered him off the place; but he soon returned to work again. Law says that last night he was drunk and made some demands upon his wife, which she refused. This so engered him that he swore he would not stay at home, but would go over to one of the neighbor's and spend the night. He says: "I told my wife that I would take my gun along so that I would not get hurt. It was taken apart and put away in the trunk. I took it out and put it together. Just then Lamar caught hold of it, and as I jerked it back. it went off and killed him. This is the first man I ever killed, and I did it accidentally. You can hang me or send me to the penitentiary if you want to."

Law is a man about forty years of age, a little more than five feet high, and weighs about 150 pounds. Four years ago he quarreled with his cousin, Stephen Glass, and inflicted an ugly gash with a knife, which came near killing the man. About a year ago his son, Ben Law, jr., and was sentenced to twelve years in the penitentiary for the deed. The father, William Law, is a respectable and wealthy farmer, but grief and shame for the all of his son and grandson have almost cost him his mind. Ben Law's record has been bad throughout. Some years ago his wife was compelled to sue for divorce, and the evidence in the case showed that he had been most brutal and had compelled his wife to do many things at the muzzle of the

There were two witnesses to the bloody deed committed last night-his wife and young girl. Their evidence show that Law had taken the gun to enforce his demands upon his wife, when Lamar interfered and was shot. Lamar has always been considered an inoffensive sort of fellow. Law gave himself up, and was brought to this city and jailed this morning.

They were placed under arrest, and, being searched, certain pieces of money identified by Mr. Koontz were found upon their persons. They afterward admitted that they committed the crime, and after a prelimin ary hearing to-day, were committed for trial in the Circuit Court. Yount is a man of good business ability, but is a kind of monomaniac, and has served some two or three terms in the penitentiary for grand larceny. Suicide by Hanging.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. NOBLESVILLE, June 11. - Elms Inman, daughter of Scott Inman, aged fifteen years, residing with her parents at Hortonville, was found by her father hanging from the rafters of an outbuilding, last evening. The young lady had been receiving attention from and correspond ing with a wandering showman, for which she was reprimanded by her father, to which she replied that they would not have to worry about her long. The next known of her was the finding of her lifeless body swinging by a heavy cord from the roof of the out-building on the rear of her father's premises. The only cause assigned is the refusal of her father to allow her to correspond with the showman, with whom she had but a slight acquaintance.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal PENDLETON, June 11.—Gas was struck in well No. 3, located at Huntsville, one mile east of this place, Saturday night, at a depth of 850 feet. The flow is constantly increasing and it is now believed that this well will prove stronger than either of the other two. This makes the total flow about 12,000,000 cubic feet per day. With the sand-mill in full operation and turning out a quality of sand which can not be surpassed in the manufacture of plate-glass, and good pros-pects for a large glass-factory locating here. A MODERN EVANGELINE.

Curate and Nun United in the Old Love After

Many Years of Separation. Chicago Special. A romantic story covering two continents has just come to light as the sequel of the settlement of a young couple in a handsome villa is the suburb of Englewood. The young man-he is but twenty-nine enow-ie the son of an Episcopal rector of note and influence in York-hire, England, and he for a time was curate of the parish. Adjoining the glebe a landed proprietor named Molineaux, whose family was of French descept and extreme respectability, resided. They were strongly Roman Catholic in their religious belief, however, and this erected an icy wall between the neighbors. Although there was no er cause, the bitterest animosity existed While attending to some parochial work the young curate met Miss Marie Molineaux, who was then only eighteen years of age and was engaged in a somewhat similar charitable errand at the very cottage he was visiting. It was a case of hopeless and infatuated love at first sight, for the girl was remarkably beautiful and the mission she was engaged in fully revealed her natural disposition.

The parents of neither knew of the numerous clandestine meetings and trysts held by them afterward until one morning they determined upon deciding the matter. The young man went to Captain Molineaux and told him he would resign his curacy if he would give him the hand of his daughter. The fury the old gentleman knew bounds, but, notwithstanding his opposi tion, the lovers continued to meet, and finally, to end it, the Molineaux family moved away from the neighborhood, leaving no clew to their destination. The young curate, after trying in vain to discover the whereabouts of his lost idol, relinquished all further pursuit in despair, and, with a nearly broken beart, he gave up the ministry, and with a small fortune he inherited came to America to embark in mercantile affairs. thinking in his new occupation he would forget his consuming sorrow. One day, while traveling on business, he was crossing a erowded thoronetifure for Quebec, and was run over, meeting with a scrious accident. He was taken to one of the ac-pitale in the city which was visited by the Sisters of Mercy. While yet suffering in his bed to the surgical ward he felt a soft hand upon his furthesd. Before he could open his eyes a little shified scream startled him into thorough wakefulpese, and a figure in black dropped upon her knees by his bedside, burying her face in the counterpane. It was little Seeming to collect herself with wondrous fortitude, the Sister of Mercy quickly arose and nastily turned to go. The patient clutched at her garment and caught the cross attached to the beads suspended at her waist. The fastening snapped and he retained it. She ran out of the ward, causing no little comment among the other patients who knew her, and had been anxiously awaiting her cheering and comforting words. Days elapsed before she returned. She visited the old cot, but it was empty. The patient had been discharged, she was told by his invalid neighbor. She hurried back to the office, and just entering a cab at the front steps was her departing lover. Without a word of explanation to his ery of joy and recognition she took a place by his side. She has been there ever since. Driving to a hotel, the housekeeper was taken into their confidence. The nun was furnished clothes from the housekeeper's wardrobe, for which she was paid handsomely. The excurate and Marie were wedded the same day and came directly to Chicago. Marie's parents had sent her to a convent in France, and from there she was transferred with other French nuns to Quebec. Mrs. McDonald Opposed to Public Life. Washington Capital.

Mrs. Joseph E. McDonald is a gracious, beautiful woman, of rather pretty form, but symmetrical and graceful as a girl, with a handsome, rosy face, so youthful as to be in most contrast with her abundant snow-white hair. There is not another couple at the capital who typify more perfectly the ideal, and, in fact, the real marriage. "I hat woman has actually added twenty years to the Sen-ator's life," said a friend of the family one day, as McDonald walked past with the firm tread of the morning of life and a look of unmistakable contentment on his face. "Why, when she married him he was head and ears in debt. his good heart cheating him into indorsing, caning and all that sort of business; and now he is clear as a whistle, with a sung little competence for his declining years." Mrs. Mc-Donald tells the following pretty story on her-self. "A joke," she calls it. To a question as to the probability of her husband being the next vice-presidential candidate for the Democrate, she said: "Not if I can help it. Indeed, would not care for him to be President, and hope he may never be drawn into political life again. The whistle is too high-priced. He is making money in his profession, and that is more than he ever did as a Senator. But that is not my greatest objection. A public life would interfere too much with our domestic happiness, and that is the dream of my life, so very late of realization."
